. . Foreword . .

There is a fresh clear beauty about the first flowers of spring, blooming in great profusion and in grateful response to the warm sunshine, that lends charm to any garden. This may cause us to overlook the fact that it is necessary to use thought in selecting new plants which will assist us in retaining a colorful display throughout the summer months. For this we need a constantly changing array of harmonious, yet distinctive coloring, and it is with this thought in mind that I am giving a brief resume of what the catalogue has to offer in adding attractiveness and continuity to a garden.

In the bearded irises, the bright and showy dwarfs are the first to flower, and are essential in our early gardens. The next are the intermediates, so called on account of their height and time of bloom, they are a sturdy race of varied hue, and are particularly effective in the foreground of the border. The crested and smaller species of irises are especially adapted to half shady places, and nooks in rock garden plantings, where they will give additional beauty after the glory of the smaller spring bulbs has vanished.

Early June brings us the tall bearded irises, and I know of nothing better for pure beauty of form and harmonious coloring than the newer varieties. Recently, there has been great advancement in this type of iris, and each year they become more and more fascinating, with their large flowers, brilliancy of coloring, and sturdy growth, especially is this to be noted in the white, yellow, red, and pink varieties, which are so lovely with their jewel-like beauty and clarity of color that it is difficult to speak of them with any degree of moderation.

Each year I visit the gardens of many prominent breeders, and make a careful selection of irises that I think are especially desirable, these as well as many others of outstanding merit from various hybridizers, are in my garden to be seen blooming at iris time. The choice of new irises for our gardens should be carried out with care and discrimination, and my advice is to choose carefully each year a few of these glorious new irises, gradually replacing those of inferior qualities, until we have a floral display of true magnificence, and one that will be a glad remembrance throughout the season.

Soon the Siberian irises and Oriental poppies are in their full glory, and a planting of these in combination with the lighter shades of bearded irises, blue lupines and delphiniums, will give a blending of lovely color elements. The newer creations in these poppies are exquisite with their charming open flowers of white, flesh, lavender, coral, pink, silken old rose, and ruby red, and so sparkling is their beauty that no garden should be without them. Those of lavender, old rose, and mahogany are best planted in half shade, away from the hot noonday sun, and the latter is singularly appealing when planted with the early pale yellow hemerocallis. In August, the Oriental poppies take their summer rest, and it is advisable to plant gypsophila and delphinium chinensis in front of them, so that their flowers and feathery foliage will conceal the sleeping of the poppies.

After the wealth of iris bloom in early June, there would be a comparative lull if it were not for the Washington hybrids of the Southern States species. Even the most particular gardener will be thrilled with these hybrids, for they have great diversity of color, with their real blues, ranging from sky-blue to deep velvety tones, palest pink to soft old rose, white, French gray, all shades of lavender, and some are almost orange in color, overcast with the soft velvety richness of copper. Their delicate and intangible quality of coloring is the more precious in that these tones are absent in most other flowers.

They are especially adapted to planting around pools and in half shady places, where so few plants will thrive and bloom. For flower arrangement and house decoration they are exquisite, and better than any other form of iris for this purpose.

Closely following the Washington hybrids are the spurias and Japanese irises. The spurias are tall and stately, so enchanting, so filled with ethereal beauty, that I cannot understand why so often they are neglected in our gardens. When it comes to the Japanese irises which bloom for nearly four weeks, there seems to be no end of fascinating effects that can be portrayed with these flowers. Their individual beauty of form and finish lends itself to delightful possibilities in creating great masses of color, often lacking at this time of year.

The newer delphiniums are a revelation to most gardeners, with their tall graceful spikes of orchid-pink, white, blue and royal purple. Not only do they bloom in June, but with proper care they will give us flowers in August and September, and these combine perfectly with the later blooming hemerocallis. There is no need to dwell upon the peonies for everyone knows of their beauty, but perhaps it is well to emphasize that they give us beautiful accents of color, and have extremely fine foliage, points to be considered in any garden planting.

Then comes the July and August slump in the garden, which it is well nigh impossible to combat if we do not have the modern hemerocallis. There are several charming early varieties, but unlike most perennials, they are at their height of bloom during these two months. In them we have a wealth of choice, for their large lily-like flowers are in great variety of coloring, palest yellow, glistening gold, orange, salmon, coral and coppery pink, soft old rose, and deep velvety rose red, yet all unite in one perfect harmony of color, giving continuous bloom from May until late September. If the charm of an evening garden is considered, where one may walk at twilight, the night blooming hemerocallis are most effective. Their great stars of light are sweetly scented, and as the shadows fall they seem to shine with magic lustre. Lovely in form and color with splendid foliage, each variety has the additional merit of a blooming season from four to six weeks, something not found in other perennials.

As the season wanes, we have the new race of fall blooming bearded irises, and the latest hemerocallis, little Multiflora. These irises are of the bearded type, and while not as large in flower as the newer tall bearded, yet if given fertilizer and plenty of water after their spring flowering, they will give us bloom until taken by the frost. An excellent planting is the late blooming Multiflora with these tall blooming irises in some sunny spot where they can be protected from our first frosts and if this is done both will bloom well through October.

To me, no more entralling hobby can be found than the creating of new varieties of plants, and there seems to be no end to the diversity of color that may be obtained through hybridization. It is from this pursuit that I get the most enjoyment, although there are many failures, often there is a success which gives encouragement to renewed effort. There is no royal road to success in gardening, it must come through patient efforts and many tumbles, but the glory of it all is the lasting happiness that a garden gives for the love of gardening is a seed that once sown never dies, but grows until it becomes an increasing source of peaceful satisfaction, and in the last analysis, the joy of a garden lies within the heart of the gardener, who views with appreciative eyes the beauty he has created.

Tall Bearded Irises

Newer and Rarer Varieties

Excellent older irises especially priced will be found on pages 13-14

The bearded irises may be planted from July 1st to Sept. 15th. In making a new bed, take out the soil for about 12 in. If the drainage is poor, 2 in. of cinders or small stones should be placed in the bottom, over this 3 in. of sods or fair garden loam, then 4 in. of well rotted cow manure. Fill the rest of the bed with rich garden loam, with this mix a little bone meal. When finished the bed should be about 4 in. above surrounding ground. Spread out roots and plant 1 in. deep, water in when planting.

WHITE GODDESS (Nesmith 1936) No. 111. Very large well domed standards of pure white, the falls are extremely arched and flaring and are also pure white. Yellow beard, and white style branches. The large flowers are glistening white and are borne on tall sturdy stalks. The following is the comment of the late Mr. Euclid Snow of Chicago: "This is a real white, the beard serving merely to light it up, not giving out color to mar the whiteness. In texture and substance this white bloom has not been surpassed, neither hot sun or heavy downpour of rain seemed to affect it, a trying twenty-four hour change in climatic conditions left it unchanged, something to be considered when placing an iris in a garden". Many of the A. I. S. judges who saw it blooming in Nashville last season said it surpassed Easter Morn, Venus di Milo and Gudrun. 40 in.	$35.00
WILL O' THE WISP (Washington 1934) Large, broad, well-domed standards of soft canary yellow. Falls of cream white, horizontal and of heavy substance. Styles same tone as falls, deep orange beard. A lovely bi-colour of large size. 39 in.	$8.00

Apogon Irises

American Species and Hybrids

This group includes new and rare Louisiana and Florida irises, and special attention is called to the named hybrids produced by Mr. T. A. Washington of Nashville, Tennessee. These bloom after the bearded irises and before the Japanese irises, and are a great addition to any garden. They are especially recommended for pool edge and half shady places in the garden.

CULTURE. In preparing ground for planting, leaf-mold or compost mixed with well decayed cow manure in the bottom, the remainder of the excavated place to be filled with leaf-mold or compost mixed with good rich garden loam. Plant rhizomes at least one inch deep, water in well and do not allow them to dry out. Late summer planting is best for it enables them to start growth soon after their dormant season. They require plenty of moisture during their growing season, but no standing water during winter. In fall give a six inch covering of leaves or marsh hay, and do not remove too early in the spring. These irises are perfectly hardy in my New England garden.

ALBISPIRITUS. An exceedingly rare Florida iris; white in color, sometimes called "the ghost iris."	$5.00
AMALATLA (Washington 1936) When flower first opens it is arbutus pink, and as flower grows older turns to soft flesh pink. A self with styles and crests of same tone, cream signal and white throat. Charming and a new color in these irises.	$10.00

Oriental Poppies

Best of the American and Foreign Varieties.

CULTURE. Poppies are best planted during their dormant season or early fall growth, which is from August 1st to October. Choose strong Field Grown stock, not pot grown varieties. Plant crowns 2 in. deep in good garden loam, be sure that the ground does not settle and leave a hollow over the crown in which water may stand during winter. After first real freeze give green leaves a light mulch of excelsior or marsh hay.

SPECIES AND RARE HYBRIDS

This list includes most of the species and a critical selection of the hybrids of American and foreign introduction. The season of bloom has been checked in my garden.

CULTURE. They may be planted in the spring or fall. Personally, I like fall planting. Set crown about 3 in. deep in rich garden loam. If soil is light and sandy it should be improved by the liberal addition of well-decayed cow manure, well mixed with rich loam. After ground has frozen give a light mulch for winter protection.
